Kirsten,

I just received an email from my publisher, and our corporate offices do not to have full articles published. But you are still able to publish a link to any current articles.

Thanks

Hello Cindy,

Again, thank you very much for getting back to me! For the older articles, I have copies of the old articles printed out from microfilm, and was planning to type them up (or scan copies of the printouts of the old pages) to post to the archive I'm working on, so the corporate office would not have to have them already published. I'm not sure if I explained that properly before, so I apologize for that.

I know I have asked for a lot of back-and-forth communication already, so thank you for bearing with me. If you have the time and would be able to clarify that with your publisher, I would very much appreciate it, but I completely understand if you don't. Unless I hear otherwise, I will just give citations for the older articles (not the full text), and links to the Kane Republican's website for the newer articles.

Thank you again for all your help! I greatly appreciate your time and your willingness to help me with my project.

Sincerely,

Kirsten Canfield

Hi Kirsten,

I talked to Darlene again and showed her this email, and she said that is fine to just use partial articles, but not full text on the older articles and of course to give credit to The Kane Republican, and then again to just post a link to any current article from 2010 to present.

Hope this helps.

Cindy

Hello Cindy,

That is perfect! I will absolutely give full credit to the Kane Republican for every article (either partial or link) that I post. All articles 2010 to present I will only post a link to, and for any article previous to that which is not on the Kane Republican website, I will include partial text of the article and give the citation for the article so viewers can find the full article in the microfilms or by some other means.

Again, I greatly appreciate your time in helping me with this project, and I am also very grateful to Darline for her permission. Have a wonderful day!

Sincerely,
Kirsten Canfield
